IN BOSTON MARKETS

Butter Receipts Light and Prices Good—Egg Supplies Small.

Boston, June 28.—Buyers are still hungry for butter in the local market, and as receipts are light, receivers find no trouble in cleaning up their consignments at firm prices. Sales of fine creamery in a wholesale way are readily made at 25 1/2c, and as much as 26c has been paid for a good sized line of a special mark of western goods. In a jobbing way 26¢ 20 1/2c is still the range on fine goods in tubs, but the margin of 1/2c is a pretty small one between wholesale and jobbing prices and a rise in the latter would not be surprising. The cheese market holds firm under moderate receipts and strong country advices. There is no weakening of egg prices, because supplies are none too large for wants.

Jobbing quotations:
Butter—Fancy northern creamery

FARMERS' FOOD AND DRINK.

Can Have Everything Pure and Can Safely Eat More Than City Man.

If farmers do not have pure food, it is because they do not really want it. says Wallace's Farmer. The farm does not afford the variety that is contained in any store in town, but it does afford the great essentials, and the variety during much of the year, can be as great as a man desires. Every farmer can have good bread, if he courted the right kind of a girl. He can have pure water, if he has located the well in the right place and keeps it properly protected. He can have whole milk, skim milk, buttermilk, cream and butter—all of the best. He can have all the fruits and vegetables that any man would want, if he will take care of the garden and orchard himself, instead of leaving it to the women folks. In addition to all this, he can have fresh eggs and poultry.
The farmer at active work requires a little different balanced ration from the ordinary man in town. He is putting forth a great deal of energy during the summer season; hence he can use more fat meat and more butter than the man who is not engaged in active outdoor employment. He needs this to furnish the calories of energy; and if he will keep the pores open, the restaurant heat will not injure him. He can safely eat much more than the average city man.

He is liable, however, to intemperance in drinking. The farmer drinks a great deal; and if he has an ice-house, he is apt to drink ice-water, which is not good to anyone, in town or on the farm. He is liable to become too warm and thirsty, and drink eagerly and hence too much. As to drinks, there is nothing better than buttermilk, and as a rule the farm furnishes plenty of it. It should not be used ice-cold, but about the temperature of cold well water.

WHY PIGS ARE OFTEN A FAILURE.

Errors of Management That Could Easily Be Avoided.

I was talking with a man not long ago who has raised hogs for many years, and he complained that his sows rarely have full litters of fair-sized, fully developed pigs, some being only partly grown and others stillborn, says D. C. Corkman in the Farmers' Review. He is a good corn grower, his farm being fertile, and in the course of the conversation he said if he could raise the hogs to eat his corn he would be well satisfied, but luck was against him.

Now, I have made a good many mistakes at one time and another in farming as well as other ventures, but I never blamed my "luck," at least, not until I studied out whether I had any part in the failure myself through want of knowledge, lack of attention or other equally important factor, so naturally I began to inquire what was the cause my friend assigned for his misfortune. His sows were mature ones, of good breed and breeding—Poland Chinas. His sire was unrelated, but the breed of his relationship, or want of it, cut no figure in results, as these were practically the same year after year. He had tried getting breeding stock of Durocs also, and yet results were no more satisfactory. This man is not the only one with this kind of trouble, and yet many never discover that it can be prevented by proper care and feeding during the pregnancy of the sow.

The sow may be in good healthy condition at time of service, and a large litter is the result, and all goes well till the demands on the sow for the nourishment of the unborn young are greater than she can supply from the food she gets. The good corn raiser usually has plenty of his favorite crop, and he wants to use his hogs well, so he shovels it out to them.

Corn is not very "heavy" in protein, the very element needed to make bone, muscle, hair, etc., and as there is not enough to go round, one by one the pigs in the litter die, and in place of being able to count on an average of 8 or 10 pigs to each sow, four or five is "doing pretty well." At the price a good sow is worth, and counting the cost of her feed for six months (this assumes, this number is a pretty poor return on the investment, and it would pay a big profit to study up on the feed question and supply what the sow needs.

Give her a chance to run to the stack of clover, alfalfa or cowpea hay, and she will balance her own ration if you feed her corn. If these are not at hand, supply shorts, oilmeal or tannage with the corn, and if possible give some succulent feed, like silage or roots of some kind, and give the sow freedom to move about so that by exercise she may induce a vigorous growth of her pigs. There are many who deery artichokes, but I have found them the best ally I ever had in the hog business, as these will supply both protein and succulence, but my experience with them will have to be "another story," and I can only repeat: Give the sow a variety of feed, some of which must contain protein; let her have exercise in abundance, comfortable sleeping quarters, and keep her from other animals that might use her roughly; and last, let her have only drink which is slightly warm, and there will be no dangers of dead or undeveloped pigs at farrowing time, and the troubles incident to this period will pass away.

A Firm Executive.

Governor Baldwin of Connecticut was pretty well known as a man of firm convictions and with the courage to stand by them, before his controversy with former President Roosevelt over a speech made by the latter in this state a year ago. The outcome of that incident, extended his reputation in such regard. A more recent happening likewise shows the firmness of the man.
A conference of declared prohibitionists is to be held in that state next month.
An invitation was sent to the governor to deliver an address of welcome. He declined, reminding them of the invitations to functions that came to him in such numbers to accept all of which would be out of the question; disormation was therefore a necessity and he frankly stated that in his judgment more than a meeting of a body of undoubtedly well-intentioned enthusiasts, who "are trying to crowd total abstenence down everybody's throat." He made it plain that he was a firm believer in the local option principle as the practical way of dealing with liquor traffic, and that he did not intend to conduct himself in any way that might lead to an inference in any quarter that he was of any other opinion.—Manchester Union.

About the State

Since the death of A. P. Hinton, the oldest person in Bethel is Mrs. Eunice Lincoln, who was 94 years old last September.

At a special meeting the vote to bond for a new school house in Essex Junction was rescinded. There were 194 votes cast, 35 women voting.

Before more than 500 people the Goodrich memorial fountain in Fair Haven was dedicated last week. The fountain is situated in a park, and cost $550.

William McCoy of Weybridge is suffering from blood poisoning, which he says he contracted from a weed while he was working in a field, at Middlebury. His left leg is badly swollen from the toes to the knee.

A lumber and shingle mill in Montgomery Center, owned by E. R. Chaplin, was burned Saturday night. A quantity of lumber was also burned. The origin of the fire is not known as the mill had not been running the past week. There was no insurance and the loss will be borne entirely by Mr. Chaplin.

It is reported that never before were so many noxious weeds in Swanton hay and grain fields. White daisies predominate to such an extent that meadows resemble white flower gardens. Kale or wild mustard is fully as thick in many grain fields and the hawk weed or paint brush has a surprising hold.
Small fruits will give a light yield this year.

SOME PROFITS BESIDES MONEY.

Visitors From the City Bring a New Point of View.

If you feed the people with simple food, allowing a fair price for the products of the farm, it will cost you for this about $2 a week for each person, writes G. W. Perry of Chester, Vt., analyzing the summer boarder question in the American Cultivator.
The preparation of the food and the care of the guests in other ways, allowing one helper to every five boarders, will cost another dollar; and the wear and tear of everything will be another. The actual cost of boarding these people will not be far from $4 a week, and that will leave you $3 or $4 a week profit on each person, for no one should think for a moment of taking them for less than $7 or $8. If you have 10 boarders for 10 weeks, you have a clean profit of at least $300, besides the sale of your farm products in this home market.

There is another kind of profit, and a very much more important one. You have learned to cook a greater variety of food and to cook it better, and somehow you will enjoy it yourselves all summer long; and if you are not a fool, all the rest of the year, too.
Then, too, you will enjoy the clean, fresh house; you won't get the windows shut down quite as closely again you'll take pleasure in the neatness of the yard, the shade of the trimmed-up trees, in the general tidiness of the premises; and when you drive home at night you'll say, "That's a pretty sleek place, that belongs to me."

There's a better profit still. These cultured guests will bring into your family their games and plays, their music and magazines and books, their fancy work, their conversation about the great things of the world; they will bring something of that marvelous breath of human life that is developed only where men dwell thickly together, and your life will be brightened and deepened and broadened by it, and made far more interesting to yourself and others.

Finally, if there is anything in you worth their while, and there may well be, even though you are poor or ignorant, you will find among these city guests, perhaps a friend, the most precious thing in the world. You will enjoy this friend more than some who have known all your life, and who live near to you. And all winter long letters will come and go, and little tokens from the country will be exchanged for keepsakes from the city; and you will be looking forward to the time when the summer will bring your friend again.

If you have succeeded in this business of keeping boarders, you need not worry about the supply of guests for next year, for these will come again and bring their friends with them.

Every Human Being Needs a Change.

There is much truth in the following, taken from a practical article on vacations in the July Woman's Home Companion:
"Last summer I met on the street a girl from Virginia. I knew her well.
She had always lived in the country.
The day was almost insufferably hot.
I was worn and city tired; she was as fresh as a rose. 'My dear,' I said, 'how can you look so fresh and delightful on a day like this?' 'And you?' How can you notice the heat,' she said wonderingly, 'when you have the glorious sky-scrapers to look at, and the shop windows, with their wonderful fashions and colors, and the people—the people and these blessed little low-necked victorias' (a drabbed-looking, little, low victoria was being driven past by a typical red-faced cabby, and those delightful high-backed hansom's —These things were to her what hills
